ROLL 13S, TISSUE 11

FOOLS' EDITION

BEST PRANKS

This past Monday was April Fools. And that means there were a lot of fake news stories, fake products, and other pranks pulled.

Below I have compiled a list of the best pranks on the Internet for that day.

Google Treasure Maps. Google added new functionality to their Maps product with a treasure hunt and old style pirate maps. It would be really cool for them to do something like this for real though.

TheSame.biz. Change.org launched a new website in which everyone can talk about how nothing should ever change.

Scope Bacon Mouthwash. Scope decided to mess with everyone by advertising mouthwash that tastes like bacon. This joke was just cruel. Bacon mouthwash?! Who doesn't want that?!

Hulu Shows. Hulu released a new lineup of shows that we all know and love very well. The catch was that these shows are fake shows within real shows, like Itchy and Scratchy (The Simpsons) or Inspector Space-time (Community). It would be cool to see these actually come to life.

Virgin Atlantic Glass Bottom Airplane. This is exactly what it sounds like. An airplane that you can see through the bottom. I think this would actually be really cool. Everyone looks out the window in the plane but you can't see anything. This would be so much better.

DARKNESS: INCORPOREAL BY JACK TERN

He stepped through the broken window, careful to avoid the shards of glass on the other side. He found himself in a long hallway.

The walls of the hallway were painted strangely as if to resemble seats and windows, some of which were broken. However he could not quite place what they were seats and windows of.

More surprisingly though, at the end of the hallway lay a figure that resembled a girl. As he walked down the hallway on the strange metallic floor, the girl shifted slightly before becoming immobile once more.

Once he reached the girl, he spoke lightly to ask if she was okay. His voice continued to rise in worry when she did not respond. So he tried a different tactic.

He attempted to nudge her awake. He was surprised to find that instead of nudging her shoulder, his hand went seemed to pass right through her. He tried again with the same result.

It seemed that he was incorporeal. But what did this mean? Did this mean he was dead? He couldn't be dead. He just couldn't be.

Or maybe it was the mysterious girl was dead? But he had just seen her move a moment ago.

He couldn't worry about either possibility now. At the moment, he needed to help this girl if he could. But how could he do so when he couldn't touch her?

And then it came to him. He might not be able to interact with her, but he could certainly interact with the objects in this world. But as he looked around, he saw that the room they were in seemed to be bare of items.

But then he looked up. And he saw a small box with a plus symbol. He knocked it down which caused the girl to wake up.

Oasis Product of the Week

BOYLAN'S CANE COLA

On sale starting today at a low price of $1.50 (was $1.75).

AEREO

Aereo is a new technology company originating in New York. What do they do? They offer live streams of television channels over the air.

This probably sounds illegal and a lot like copyright infringement but it's not. A recent court ruling declared it to be perfectly legal.

How does it work? Aereo uses coin size antennas to deliver the signal to the device of your choosing. These antennas are connected via the Internet and can be controlled currently via any Apple device or Roku box.

Currently Aereo is a service only available in New York but they have major plans to expand to over twenty cities, including Philadelphia.

The current channel lineup includes CBS, NBC, Fox, ABC, The CW, and PBS.

Character of the Week

KELBY "BEE" REED

I am an RA on KC4, as well as the new House Coordinator. As a senior Theater Arts major, most of my free time is spent working on shows. I've stage managed a number of shows on campus, and in the Philly area. I'm usually working on more than one show at a time, hence the horrendous coffee addiction I've acquired over the past few years. In addition to theater my downtime is spent sewing, watching Doctor Who, and swimming. This semester I'm also finishing up a thesis on Roman theater, so if I start reciting Plautus, don't be alarmed!

THE WEEK AHEAD: 4/4—4/10

4/4—Speakeasy. Enjoy the spoken word? Want to perform? Come to KCECH's speakeasy in Mirage.

4/4—Take Back the Night. Join the fight against sexual violence on the College Green.

4/6—Rube Goldberg Competition. Hate simplicity? Like building complicated contraptions? Then participate in STWing's Rube Goldberg competition.

4/6—Cherry Blossom Festival. Head to DC with KCECH to check out the lovely cherry blossom festival.

4/8—WiCS Tech Workshop. Join WiCS for another excellent workshop in new and amazing technologies.

4/10, 10pm—Study Break. This study break will be a big surprise. To you and to us managers. We have no idea what it is.

VERONICA MARS MOVIE PROJECT

Remember Veronica Mars? If the answer is no, stop reading and go watch it now. No, seriously. But really, how did you miss this amazing show?

If you remember (as you should), then you should also remember that the show ended quite abruptly with an unsatisfying end.

Fortunately, however, that is about to change. Thanks to the efforts of Rob Thomas and Kristen Bell on Kickstarter, a Veronica Mars movie will be going into production rather soon.

Fans of the show broke Kickstarter records by donating two million dollars in less than twelve hours.

Fans are continuing to donate and have currently hit the mark of over four point four million dollars!

This has major implications for other hit series that ended prematurely, like Firefly.
